For civilians, Azerbaijan is keeping door open for integration. For those wanting to leave for Armenia, various forms of support, including health care, food, and fuel, continue to be provided

While internationally recognized as Azerbaijani territory, a significant portion of the Nagorno-Karabakh region was under Armenian occupation from 1992 to 2020. The second Karabakh war, which began with Armenian attacks on Sept. 27, 2020, and lasted for 44 days, ended with a major success for the Azerbaijani army. While Yerevan accepted defeat, a new process began in South Caucasus following the agreement signed that Nov. 10 between Azerbaijani President İlham Aliyev and Armenian Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan, breaking the 28-year-old status quo. However, tensions in the region did not subside, and Armenian forces in Karabakh continued their systematic attacks on the Azerbaijani army and people.
