Canberra expected to push for removal of remaining trade impediments after Wang Yi arrives next week.

Chinas foreign minister, Wang Yi, will visit Australia for the first time in seven years, with next weeks trip being locked in just hours after Beijing offered a reprieve to Australian winemakers.

China imposed tariffs of up to 200% on Australian wine at the height of the diplomatic dispute in 2020, alongside measures affecting a range of products including barley, red meat, seafood and coal.
