BBC News (21 November 2024)

Paul Adams

As the Russian army slowly advances in eastern Ukraine, its driving a tide of human suffering before it.

With two months to go before a change of administration in Washington, Ukraine is wrestling with two problems: how to stem the advance, and how to prepare for Donald Trump.

At a shelter in Pavlohrad, about 60 miles (100km) west of the slowly shifting front line, evacuees are constantly arriving from villages and towns overtaken by the war.
