Donald Trump trashing United States climate efforts will empower rivals to control the industries of tomorrow, Europes top competition and climate official said Thursday.

It is not good news that a big player such as the United States decides to go in a different direction, Teresa Ribera said in an interview in her office in Brussels. It is not good news for anyone. But * whenever there is a big player that decides to abandon a room, there will be other players entering.

Ribera is in her third week as a European Commission executive vice president, one of just six helping run the European Unions executive branch. Her portfolio only makes her more powerful.
