The defense minister of Bosnia and Herzegovina on Wednesday said the country is reconsidering mandatory military service due to new global developments.

Our neighbors Serbia and Croatia announced they will begin introducing mandatory military service. However, it would be very difficult to implement in Bosnia and Herzegovina due to complex constitutional structure, Zukan Helez told Anadolu. Conscription in the Balkan country ended in 2006.

Emphasizing that mandatory military service would contribute to personal development and instill a sense of discipline, Helez said the country is working on alternative solutions.
