Türkiye and Turkmenistan have reached an agreement to facilitate the flow of natural gas from Turkmenistan, marking a major step in strengthening bilateral energy cooperation. The deal, announced on February 11, will see Turkmen natural gas begin flowing to Türkiye starting March 1, 2025.

Turkish Energy Minister Alparslan Bayraktar highlighted the historic nature of the deal, which was finalized between Türkiye's state-owned pipeline operator BOTAŞ and Turkmenistan's state gas company, Turkmengaz. In a statement on social media, Bayraktar emphasized the progress made in the natural gas sector and the strategic importance of the agreement for both nations.

This agreement, which we have been working on for many years, will significantly enhance the strategic cooperation between Türkiye and Turkmenistan, while strengthening the natural gas supply security for our country and the broader region, Bayraktar said.
