Azerbaijan's Ambassador to Germany, Nasimi Aghayev, has urged the new government to be formed in Germany following the Bundestag elections to recognize the Khojaly genocide.

"As a leading European democracy, Germany has a special responsibility in addressing historical crimes. My hope is that the new German government will not only recognize Khojaly as genocide but also actively support the international awareness of the massacre," he said in an interview with Germany's Capital Beat, News.Az reports citing local media.

To the question why the world powers have not yet recognized events in Khojaly as genocide, the ambassador noted with regret that in international politics, morality is often subordinated to realpolitik.
