The first-ever trilateral summit between the presidents of Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, and Uzbekistan will take place in the Tajik city of Khujand on March 31. The announcement was made by Kyrgyz Deputy Prime Minister Edil Baisalov during the 58th session of the UN Human Rights Council in Geneva.

Baisalov highlighted the summit's significance, noting that the final agreement on the Kyrgyz-Tajik border had been reached, calling it a "historic victory of diplomacy and political will." He credited Kyrgyz President Sadyr Japarov's dedication to ensuring peace and stability in the region as a key factor in resolving the long-standing dispute.

The summit is expected to focus on strengthening regional cooperation and addressing key issues related to security, economic development, and infrastructure projects. Among the documents prepared for signing are agreements on state borders, energy cooperation, water resource management, and the construction of new roads.
