The Iraqi Prime Minister's Advisor for Foreign Relations, Farhad Ala'aldin, confirmed on Thursday that the US government's decision regarding diplomatic missions comes as part of its regional assessment and is not directly related to the security situation in Iraq.

Ala'aldin told the Iraqi News Agency (INA): "Iraq is witnessing a state of unprecedented stability and prosperity compared to previous years, and the Iraqi government is keen to provide full protection to all diplomatic missions operating in the country. There is no real threat targeting individuals or workers there."
