Russian President Vladimir Putin is set to visit China next week, just days after US President Donald Trump concluded his trip to the Asian country, according to a report by the South China Morning Post on Friday.

The Post reported that the day-long visit will take place on May 20, citing sources, who also said the trip is part of Moscow's routine engagement with Beijing, with little expectation of an elaborate parade or welcome ceremony.

Neither Beijing nor Moscow have confirmed the dates, so far.
