Armenian Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan attended the inaugural Armenia-United Kingdom Business Forum in Yerevan.

The Prime Minister delivered a speech and welcomed the participants, emphasizing that holding the forum is logical after the signing of the memorandum on establishing a strategic partnership between Armenia and the United Kingdom in May this year.

After establishing such a partnership, the primary question that arises for governments is the following: how to turn that political will, which is expressed through adopted documents or a document, into reality. And the most effective way to solve this problem is to make the political content discussed between governments part of everyday life. And such forums serve precisely that purpose—to fill the space opened by governments with real life.
