China has called bilateral trade ties with the 27-member EU highly integrated and mutually dependent, stressing a need for dialogue over trade concerns.

The statement came after France and Germany called Monday for new EU trade instruments, arguing that the blocs existing measures are no longer sufficient to address challenges facing its trade system.

Between China and the EU, the industrial and supply chains are highly integrated and mutually dependent, and our economic and trade relations are mutually beneficial in nature, Chinas Foreign Ministry spokesman Guo Jiakun said in a written statement late Tuesday.
