Kazakhstan and Russia have agreed on 171 collaborative projects, with more than 50 already in the final stages of implementation, as President Kassym-Jomart Tokayev met with Russian Security Council Secretary Sergei Shoigu to discuss further strengthening their bilateral partnership.

During the meeting, Tokayev emphasized the growing cooperation between the two nations, highlighting the importance of Russian investments in Kazakhstan's economy. He noted that Russia is now one of Kazakhstan's key investors, a testament to the success of their economic collaboration.

"The cooperation between our countries is progressing well, including within law enforcement and defense sectors. This visit offers an opportunity to review our existing efforts and explore new areas for collaboration," Tokayev said.
