Kazakhstan has started implementing a comprehensive military reform approved at a Security Council meeting chaired by President Kassym-Jomart Tokayev, Qazinform News Agency reports, citing the Defense Ministry.

According to the ministry, the reform aims to restructure the Armed Forces, streamline command and control, upgrade force training, reform service procedures, and strengthen legal protections for troops.

The Head of State set the objective of shaping a modern, mobile, and high-tech force, with a strong focus on service safety, command culture, and efficient resource allocation.
