About the EUISS

According to its webpage, The European Union Institute for Security Studies (EUISS) is the Union's Agency analyzing foreign, security, and defense policy issues. Its core mission is to assist the EU and its member states in implementing the Common Foreign and Security Policy (CFSP), including the Common Security and Defence Policy (CSDP) and other external actions of the Union. It is also stated on the webpage that The Institute was set up in January 2002 as an autonomous agency under Council Joint Action 2001/554 to strengthen the EU's analysis, foresight, and networking capacity in external action. The Institute also acts as an interface between the EU institutions and external experts – including security actors – to develop the EU's strategic thinking. The EUISS is an integral part of the structures that underpin the further development of the CFSP/CSDP. The EUISS is headquartered in Paris, France. In 2012, it opened a Liaison Office (BLO) in Brussels, Belgium, situated in the Justus Lipsius building – the main seat of the Council of the EU and the General Secretariat of the Council. The BLO boosts the Institute's presence and visibility in the home of the EU institutions, and around forty individuals work at the EUISS. As for the webpage, the Institute's activities focus on policy-oriented analysis through its publications or events, and the EUISS' flagship publication is its Chaillot Paper series.<sup>[1]</sup>

How did Chaillot Papers portray Türkiye in its past publications?

In our AVİM Analysis dated 2 October 2018 and numbered 2018/18, we provided information on the EUISS Chaillot Paper No. 147 titled "Balkan Futures- Three Scenarios for 2025" published on 3 September 2018. We expressed our criticism and dismay about the presentation of Türkiye in the Chaillot Paper as an adversary country to the EU in the Balkans. In the EUISS paper in question, Türkiye was named as one of the "disruptive external actors" of the Balkans. In our mentioned analysis, we characterized this reference as "extremely unfair" and stressed that the EUISS owes a correction to the Turkish public for naming Türkiye as such. [2]

Another example is Chaillot Paper /171, published by EUISS in December 2021, titled "Strategic Compass: New Bearings for EU Security and Defence?" This paper describes Türkiye as a country that intervenes in the Balkans from outside, along with Russia and China. It is claimed that it harms the interests of the EU. In the same Paper, Türkiye, Russia, and China are also described as countries in strategic competition with the EU in the south and east of the EU. In our analysis regarding this Chaillot Paper, we made the following assessment of these characterizations:

"As these references reveal, European Union Institute for Security Studies, as a general approach, considers Türkiye, which has been an associate country of the EU since 1963, a candidate for membership since 2005, and a NATO member since 1952, as an adversary country. EUISS should seriously ask itself how it is possible to prepare a primary document for the EU on security and defence with such a shallow vision. In our judgment, it would not be wrong to consider such a hostile attitude towards Türkiye as the eclipse of reason." [3]

New Chaillot Paper/ 182: "Türkiye's Cards In The World: Raising The Stakes"

The EUISS published a new Chaillot Paper on Türkiye last month. The paper is titled "Türkiye's Cards In The World: Raising The Stakes." The Paper's Executive Summary section starts with the following introduction:

"Türkiye's footprint in various regions of the world has expanded. This is clear not only in economic terms but also in the country's successful projection of its soft power, as demonstrated by its educational initiatives or in the popularity of Turkish television series with audiences across Africa, the Middle East, the South Caucasus, and the Western Balkans. At the hard power end of the spectrum, it is reflected in the growing prominence of Türkiye's TB2 drones in modern battlefields. This confluence of cultural exports and technological advancements paints a picture of a country with clear ambitions: diplomatic prowess, economic expansion, and powerful military capabilities. " [4]

As mentioned in the above paragraph, the paper focuses on four regions: Africa, the Middle East, the South Caucasus, and so-called "the Western Balkans. " [5] In the conclusion section of the Paper, which bears the sub-title of "Charting a course for regional cooperation, "Dalia Ghanem proposes the following:

"The relationship between the EU and Türkiye is complex, marked by cooperation and tension. Efforts by both sides to stop the escalatory dynamics in the Eastern Mediterranean have been pursued and must continue, as stated by the European Commission Conclusions of June 2021. Türkiye's growing influence across the Balkans, South Caucasus, Africa, and the Middle East presents an opportunity for both sides to refocus on common ground and build a strategic partnership. Broader geopolitical shifts also make such a partnership increasingly important for the EU. This chapter outlines policy recommendations for the EU to navigate this evolving landscape, capitalising on Türkiye's strengths while addressing potential areas of friction... As seen in the four previous chapters, Türkiye commands significant soft power which allows it to build bridges with countries across these regions. The EU can explore many ways to leverage this soft power to promote regional stability and cultural exchange. "[6]

The conclusion section includes suggestions regarding areas where concrete cooperation with Türkiye can be made for each region.

Conclusion

The details of the proposals regarding the cooperation that can be made by the EU and Türkiye according to the regions included in the Chaillot Paper/182 are undoubtedly important. In our judgment, the important aspect of the Chaillot Paper 182 is that, in a paper prepared under the responsibility of EUISS, Türkiye was not considered this time as an adversary country. We interpret it as a positive development, as the EU has begun to recover from its mental eclipse. The point to remember is this: The most straightforward approach is to be confrontational, stick to patterns, and repeat the same narrative as a parrot. On the other hand, what is difficult but in the interest of societies, communities, and countries is to put conflict aside, cooperate, and try to understand each other.
