

CHINA'S TAIWAN POLICY AND APPROACH TO THE CYPRUS QUESTION

Seyda Nur OSMANLI

Scholar in Residence

Analysis No : 2025 / 4

11.04.2025

This is the English translation of a Turkish language article that was originally published by AVİM on 5 February 2025.

At the end of World War II, the Cairo Declaration was signed through which it was agreed upon that Taiwan, which had been annexed by Japan in 1895, would be returned to China. However, a civil war between nationalists and communists in China began in 1945. With the victory of the communists lead by the Communist Party in 1949, the Peoples Republic of China (PRC) was established. Meanwhile, the Chinese Nationalist Party members took refuge in Taiwan as representatives of the Republic of China. Thus, the Taiwan Question began in terms of the territorial, political and diplomatic representation of the Chinese people. Beijing administration, viewed the problem as an internal matter from the beginning and did not accept the intervention of any country. While the PRC adopted the policy of liberation of Taiwan by force of arms in the 1950s, a softer policy of one main title, four items was adopted in 1960. In the Deng Xiaoping era, with the impact of the Reform and Opening-up policy, the one country, two system policy was adopted and it was planned to give the island of Taiwan political and economic autonomy through the peaceful unification of the island with mainland China. However, since the occupation of Japan, Taiwan has developed notable differences from mainland China on many issues such as political administration, Taiwanese identity discussions, and especially the difference in economic development.^[1]

Due to the Cold War conditions, until the 1970s, the Western bloc countries, especially the United States, recognized the Taiwan administration under the name of the Republic of China instead of the PRC. Additionally, the Republic of China joined the UN as a representative of the Chinese people. Many factors such as the Sino-Soviet split, the Vietnam War and the impact of the Vietnam War on US domestic politics, post-colonial movements and the Non-Aligned Movement have all been instrumental in changing the attitude of the US and the Western Bloc towards the PRC. The most important obstacle to the US policy towards the PRC is the fact that the PRC did not give a guarantee that it would not use force against Taiwan. On the other hand, the US wanted to maintain economic and political relations with Taiwan, especially in arm sales. Eventually, in 1971 the Beijing administration was recognized by the UN as the sole representative of the Chinese people. The US, on the other hand, was able to maintain relations with Taiwan by passing the Taiwan Relations Act in 1979.[2]

Until this period, the most important issue of the Beijing administration was to be recognized and to overcome its diplomatic isolation in light of its One-China principle. With regards to Türkiye, which started its relations with the PRC in 1971, the most important issue in the period in question was the aggravation of the Cyprus Question. When the policies followed by the PRC, which became a member of the UN Security Council in 1971, towards Cyprus are examined, it can be clearly seen that the PRC did not participate in the voting from 1971 to 1981, and even though the PRC participated in the voting after 1981, it adopted the same attitude as the other permanent members.[3] It is argued that the PRC was trying to strengthen cooperation with the EU, the US and Russia through multilateral organizations such as the UN, since the PRC did not have a traditional influence in the region.[4] The Greek Cypriot Administration of Southern Cyprus (GCASC) established relations with the Beijing administration in 1971 and has been one of the most important supporters of the PRC's primary policies, especially the One China principle. The Minister of Defense of the GCASC visited the PRC for the first time in 2001. While supporting the PRC on Taiwan and the One China policy, the GCASC criticized the arms embargo of the EU on the PRC. Similarly, the PRC supported the GCASC in the Cyprus Question.[5] Türkiye did not make a policy to exert political and economic influence against the PRC regarding the Cyprus Question during this period.[6] Türkiye's close contacts with the PRC would last until the 1990s.

Three main factors played a role in the PRC's approach to the Cyprus Question: the priority of making economic and political gains, security perception, and geopolitical considerations. The first is related to the PRC's permanent membership to the UN and increasing diplomatic and political influence during this period, the integration of the PRC in the neoliberal system with its membership in the World Trade Organization in 2001, and thus the increasing importance of economic and trade policies. The second reason is related to the Taiwan Question and its security aspects. While the PRC accepts the current situation regarding Taiwan as the status quo, it perceives any initiative that will change the current situation on other issues, such as the Cyprus Question, as a revisionist attempt. Moreover, the PRC is concerned that this would set an example for Taiwan. In this context, the PRC supported the GCASC's claims in accordance with UN resolutions. The third reason is related to the geopolitical importance of the Eastern Mediterranean and the island of Cyprus. Since 2007, the discovery of energy sources in the Eastern Mediterranean and the power struggle in the region have influenced the PRC's role in the region. Additionally, the use of Cyprus during the evacuation of the PRC citizens from Lebanon proved that Cyprus is of strategic importance in terms of the PRC's Middle East policy.[7]

During the attempted implementation of the UNs Annan Plan, the PRC declared that it would act in congruence with the international community. Commenting on the results of the voting that took place in the island of Cyprus on the Annan Plan, the PRCs UN permanent representative stated that the Plan did not produce the desired outcome.[8] The GCASC becoming a member of the EU in 2004 is the motivating economic reason for the PRC to improve its relations with the GCASC. The relations have thus gradually developed under this consideration. The EU membership of the GCASC and the legislation implemented by the GCASC have made it easier for the PRC to develop its trade with the EU. The GCASC has taken various steps such as a golden visa scheme to attract PRCs investments.[9] In 2019, the GCASC joined the Belt and Road Initiative and in 2021 relations have progressed to the level of strategic partnership.[10] The PRC companies have investments, especially in the fields of digital infrastructure and green transformation (such as solar panels). The Vasilikos LNG terminal project is one of such investments.

As detailed in the article titled Beijing on the Cyprus Problem: One China, One Cyprus? published in China Med Project, the PRCs official one China policy discourse towards Taiwan has recently been equated with the One Cyprus discourse.[11] The One China, One Cyprus discourse has been used by high level representatives such as Liu Yantao (who has been the PRCs ambassador to the GCASC since 2020), GCASCs former ambassador to China and its currently the GCASCs Prime Minister, and has been adopted by the GCASC press as well. [12] This discourse is problematic from a legal, political, identity, religious, and cultural point of view, as it views the Taiwan and Cyprus Questions as identical issues. Ambassador Liu views the discourse of One China, One Cyprus in the context of the Global Security Initiative proposed by Chinese President Xi Jinping in 2022. The Global Security Initiative, together with the Global Development Initiative announced in 2021 and the Global Civilization Initiative announced in 2023, explains the PRCs approach developed towards the international system in the context of the vision of Community of Common Destiny. The Global Security Initiative promotes a proactive approach and practical actions to address international issues.[13] This situation shows that the PRC wants to play a more leading role in international issues and conflicts. Ambassador Liu, is approaching the Cyprus Question in this regard. However, the Cyprus Question has quite different attributes in comparison to the Beijing Declaration, Iran-Saudi Arabia mediation, and Myanmar examples evaluated within the scope of the Global Security Initiative. On the other hand, it is stated that Lius discourse is not repeated often as before and the discourse has not received significant interest in Beijing.[14] It is claimed that the rapprochement in the Türkiye-PRC relations with the high-level visits in 2024 played a role in this situation.[15]

In conclusion, the PRCs approach towards the Cyprus Question has been mainly shaped by the desire to make economic and commercial gains. Since its establishment therefore, the PRC, which has accepted the status quo in international disputes due to its security threat perception regarding Taiwan, has approached the Cyprus Question in support of the GCASCs claims based on economic and commercial motives.

[1] Barış Adıbelli, Stratejik Kuşatma. İstanbul: IQ Kültür ve Sanat, 2017. ; Çağdaş Üngör, Tayvan Sorunu. K. İnat, B. Duran ve M. Ataman (Ed.), Dünya Çatışmaları: Çatışma Bölgeleri ve Konuları (2. bs., ss. 501-515), Ankara: Nobel.

[2] Barış Adıbelli, Stratejik Kuşatma. İstanbul: IQ Kültür ve Sanat, 2018.

[3] Kadir Temiz, An Illustration of Sino-Turkish Relations: The Cyprus Question, Insight Turkey, 2018, 20(1), 81-98. s. 90

[4] Hayriye Kahveci-Özgür, Jiuzhoi Duan, Chinas Silky Involvement in the Eastern Mediterranean: A Geopolitical Uupper Hand for Greece and Cyprus?, Journal of Balkan and Near Eastern Studies, 2023, 25(1), 65-81.

[5] Kadir Temiz, An Illustration of Sino-Turkish Relations: The Cyprus Question, Insight Turkey, 2018, 20(1), 81-98.

[6] Kadir Temiz, An Illustration of Sino-Turkish Relations: The Cyprus Question, Insight Turkey, 2018, 20(1), 81-98.

[7] Kadir Temiz, An Illustration of Sino-Turkish Relations: The Cyprus Question, Insight Turkey, 2018, 20(1), 81-98.

[8] Kadir Temiz, An Illustration of Sino-Turkish Relations: The Cyprus Question. Insight Turkey, 2018, 20(1), 81-98.

[9] Hayriye Kahveci-Özgür, Jiuzhoi Duan, Chinas Silky Involvement in the Eastern Mediterranean: A Geopolitical Uupper Hand for Greece and Cyprus?, Journal of Balkan and Near Eastern Studies, 2023, 25(1), 65-81.

[10] Chinese Ambassador Yantao: China will Play a Constructive Role in Resolving the Cyprus Issue as Always, 2024, 7 February, Cyprus Mirror, Accessed https://www.kibrispostasi.com/c140-DAILY_NEWS/n506542-chinese-ambassador-yantao-china-will-play-a-constructive-role-in-resolving-the-cyprus-issue-as-always

[11] Leonardo Bruni, Ahmet Faruk Işık, Beijing on the Cyprus Problem: One China, One Cyprus?, The China-Global South Project, 2025, 8 January, Accessed <https://chinaglobalsouth.com/analysis/beijing-on-the-cyprus-problem-one-china-one-cyprus/>.

[12] Cyprus CCEIA Relations (n.d) CCEIA, 2025, 5 February, Accessed <https://www.unic.ac.cy/cceia/cyprus-china-relations/>

[13] Implementing the Global Security Initiative to Build a World of Lasting Peace and Universal Security, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Peoples Republic of China. Accesed

https://www.mfa.gov.cn/eng/wjb/zzjg_663340/swaqsws_665306/xgxw/202403/t20240328_11272725.h

[14] Leonardo Bruni, Ahmet Faruk Işık, Beijing on the Cyprus Problem: One China, One

Cyprus?, The China-Global South Project, 2025, 8 January, Accessed <https://chinaglobalsouth.com/analysis/beijing-on-the-cyprus-problem-one-china-one-cyprus/>

[15] Leonardo Bruni, Ahmet Faruk Işık, Beijing on the Cyprus Problem: One China, One Cyprus?, The China-Global South Project, 2025, 8 January, Accessed <https://chinaglobalsouth.com/analysis/beijing-on-the-cyprus-problem-one-china-one-cyprus/>

About the Author :

To cite this article: OSMANLI, Seyda Nur. 2026. "CHINA'S TAIWAN POLICY AND APPROACH TO THE CYPRUS QUESTION." Center For Eurasian Studies (AVİM), Analysis No.2025 / 4. April 11. Accessed May 30, 2026. <https://www.avimbulten.org/public/en/Analiz/CHINA-S-TAIWAN-POLICY-AND-APPROACH-TO-THE-CYPRUS-QUESTION>

Süleyman Nazif Sok. No: 12/B Daire 3-4 06550 Çankaya-ANKARA / TÜRKİYE

Tel: +90 (312) 438 50 23-24 • Fax: +90 (312) 438 50 26

 @avimorgtr

 <https://www.facebook.com/avrasyaincelemelerimerkezi>

E-Mail: info@avim.org.tr

<http://avim.org.tr>

© 2009-2025 Center for Eurasian Studies (AVİM) All Rights Reserved

